Now I'm going to read you a description of debit cards, sometimes called pre-paid cards or benefit cards. A debit card allows you to receive money electronically into a debit card account and then use the debit card to buy things or get cash. You do not need a bank account to use one. With a debit card you can spend up to the amount that has been deposited on your card. You can get cash at an ATM machine or use your card to make purchases or get cash back at grocery stores and other retail locations instead of using cash. You can also use your card to pay bills, make purchases on the Internet or by phone, and buy money orders at the post office or other places that sell money orders.

Some people also receive benefits or payments from their state government for things like food stamps, welfare, or child support on a debit card.
