I am writing to ask for your support of continuing the Maternity Practices in Infant Nutrition and Care (mPINC) survey.

It is not only a critical tool for understanding how hospital and birth center maternity care practices support or create barriers to breastfeeding, but it's an acknowledgement of the importance of infants and children in our society.

As someone who works in maternal and infant health, I have seen how extent to which hospital practices shape breastfeeding outcomes and subsequently the longterm health of U.S. infants and children.

I hope the Office of Management and Budget will approve the continuation of the mPINC survey. This will ensure evidence-based improvements in maternity care that will ensure optimal breastfeeding outcomes for all of our mothers and their children.

Thank you.
